Unresolved Camp Letterman Burial Sites

The first five of the earliest deaths at Camp Letterman were apparently buried in a location divorced from the eventual hospital cemetery. There is some reason to believe that these burial sites may have been close up to the woods, perhaps near the death house and embalming tents, and the marks of these first burials were eradicated and the graves leveled over. These interments originally were not listed by Row but merely by grave number.

O'Neal's "Ledger" indicates that at least three non-Camp Letterman interments (gunners from Carpenter's Virginia Battery) were leveled and eradicated by Camp Letterman operations. Because he had recorded them earlier, he was able to remember them from his notes when disinterment of Confederates to Hollywood Cemetery occurred. O'Neal recorded the Camp Letterman hospital-related graves when the General Hospital was disbanded and the cemetery was completed. He would not, therefore, have had the opportunity to record the names on hospital-related headboards or markers before they had been eradicated by hospital development. Weaver's disinterment records for the 1872-73 Hollywood Cemetery shipments indicated that, in addition to the three pre-Camp Letterman interments from Carpenter's Battery, there were an additional ten unidentified remains being sent to Richmond from Camp Letterman. At least five of these had to have been from the earlier, leveled over, cemetery. The other five may have been from graves where headboards had also disappeared.

John P. Brundage,* Company C, 137th New York
